M. LOTI SAILS OFF FOR DEAR FRANCE FLEEING OUR NOISE

Thence Noted Litterateur Will Go to Quiet Stamboul to Take the "Rest Cure."

Pierre Loti, the French writer, after a month's visit to New York, which he frankly despises, sailed away for France, to-day, on the Provence, of the French line. He came in protesting he feared an interview with the crude reporters of America would wreck his artistic temperament; he threatened to disguise himself and did go so far as to adopt an assumed name.

But there was nothing shy about his going away. He took a position on the sunniest spot of the promonade deck, where most of the people aboard and on the pier could see him. Most of his conversation was regarding the distressing noise of the cl.y.

M. Loti wore a gray velvet caterpillar hat and necktle of trully oriental splendor-orange and red and blue, There was also the green overcoat, which he wore on his arrival, and his moustaches were waxed upward until their sharp tips almost touched the sof: pink bloom which warmed his pale cheeks.

"I sail to France," he said, "and then to Stamboul, where I have bought a house in the quietost part of the city. There I shall seek the rest cure for this terrible noise and bustle of New York." Mr. Lott was accompanied by M. s.

Tessan, a French newspaper correspondent, who thinks the person of his literary friend is sacred because his literary achievements are undisputed. M. de Tessan was annoyed because of the levity with which his willingness to fight duels with critics of M. Lotl had been treated in New York. He had fought two duels with sabres in France, and in one had nearly severed his opponent's arm. Recently, he said, he had been studying boxing. He requested the reporters to feel the muscles of his good right arm, especially the representatives of those papers whose writers had not shown what he felt a proper reverence or his hero.

Supplement to Auto Directory. A supplement to Robains's Motor Car-Directory of automobiles registered in New York State has just been issued. It contains 15,000 additional numbers and indicates registrations up to last week. This directory, which is in book form and pocket size, has proven variable not only to motorists but in various businesses as well. The license numbers of cars are given in numerical order, with the owner's name and ad-dress. One can tell at a glance at the license number who owns any car that passes on the street. The directory is published by the Robbins Motor Car Directory Company of No. 1777 Broad-
